

John Klier Event 2008

John Klier (1944-2007) taught in the Hebrew and Jewish Studies Department at UCL from 1989 until his sudden and untimely death in September 2007. He was one of the most innovative and influential historians of East European Jewry and enjoyed an extraordinary degree of respect and affection among his colleagues the world over. Deeply committed to his department and the college more generally, he was well known to many colleagues right across UCL. Not least, he was a loyal supporter of the ASCR and served for many years on its committee. In the light of John's keen interest in various forms of music, the committee has decided to commemorate John's contribution, and his life and achievements more generally, with an annual music event.
